IFAC Conference on Technology, Culture and International Stability 22nd TECIS 2024

Second Announcement and Call for Papers TECIS2024

On behalf of the organizing committee, it is our pleasure to invite you to submit papers and proposals for invited sessions to the 22nd IFAC Conference on Technology, Culture and International Stability TECIS 2024 (<http://tecis2024.com/>) which will take place on May 29th – 31st, 2024 in Waterford (Ireland) organized by the South East Technological University, Waterford.

SCOPE

Recent years have witnessed dramatic changes in international stability. The world has never seemed so unstable and uncertain. International stability problems are systemic in nature, and include control systems failures and uncertainties about system effects. The automatic control of global systems of information, finance, power and other resources has both negative and positive consequences. We can think of the global uncertainty of financial systems, threats of terrorism through advanced systems intrusions and environmental threats. What can control systems engineers and information technologists contribute to solving these problems? TECIS2024 brings together technologies, applications, methodologies, culture and other contributions which address stability in local and international systems, including political, economic, social and technological systems.

TOPICS

- 1 Control and Automation to Improve Social and Political Stability
- 2 Digital Culture
- 3 Advanced Technology, Conflict and Post-conflict
- 4 Digital Diversity and Inclusion
